Mustafa Kemal Atatürk, the visionary leader and first President of the Republic of Turkey, orchestrated a series of transformative reforms that left an indelible mark on the nation's history. Following the end of World War I, Atatürk led Turkey through a challenging period of change. In 1923, he founded the Republic of Turkey, officially proclaimed on October 29th, and became its first President. Over the next decade, Atatürk implemented a range of progressive reforms. In 1930, He established the Central Bank of the Republic of Turkey, solidifying the foundation for a stable and modern economic system. In 1924, he introduced a new European-inspired legal code. In 1928, he initiated the adoption of the Latin alphabet, replacing the Arabic script, to enhance literacy and communication. Atatürk granted women the right to vote and run for office in 1934, making Turkey one of the first countries in the world to grant full suffrage to women. His tireless efforts to modernize Turkey's political, social, and economic structures have left an enduring legacy, and his passing in 1938 marked the end of an era, with Atatürk's vision continuing to shape the nation's identity to this day.

Once upon a time in a little village, there was a farmer named Jake. One day, he got a mysterious map that pointed to the Crystal Cave in the Whispering Woods. Feeling brave, Jake decided to go on an adventure. With his wooden sword, Jake traveled through forests, crossed rivers, and climbed mountains. He met magical creatures and solved tricky riddles. The map helped him overcome challenges, and he learned that being clever and brave was important. After a few days, Jake reached the entrance of the Crystal Cave. Inside, he found a cool place with glowing crystals guarded by a big dragon. Jake fought the dragon and won! The people inside the cave were happy. Jake came out with a bag of special crystals, each with its own magic. When he went back to his village, everyone thought he was a hero. The crystals brought good luck, and the village became better. So, the farmer Jake turned into a famous hero. People in the village always remembered his bravery and the cool crystals he brought back. And they all lived happily ever after.....

5. Read the comparison paragraph on Greece and Turkey traditions and answer the following questions. (15p)

Greece and Turkey, neighboring countries with rich histories, share diverse yet distinctive clothing and food traditions. In Greece, traditional attire often includes toga-like garments during cultural events, reflecting ancient influences. Similarly, Turkish clothing, influenced by the Ottoman era, embraces a variety of styles with vibrant colors and intricate patterns. Both nations boast Mediterranean-inspired cuisines with Greek dishes like moussaka and Turkish delights from Turkey, each featuring unique spices and flavors. The cultural richness in clothing and food highlights the distinct charm of these neighboring nations.
